

February 2012

Extell Development Launches Sales For ONE57

Extell Development Company announces that sales have commenced for ONE57, a new 90-story glass tower designed by Pritzker-Prize-winning architect Christian de Portzamparc. Slated to be the tallest residential tower in New York City, and located in the famed Plaza District between 6th and 7th avenues and across from Carnegie Hall, ONE57 West 57th Street will rise to over 1,000 feet above Midtown Manhattan.

ONE57, poised to become New York City's next landmark, will feature 95 ultra-luxury condominium residences above a five-star Park Hyatt hotel. Envisioned by a team of world-class talent, this architectural masterpiece will provide residents with breathtaking, unobstructed views of Central Park to the North, the famed Manhattan skyline to the South, and both Hudson and East Rivers. The condominiums will begin on floor 39 and culminate on floor 90.

Christian de Portzamparc, whose credits include The City of Music in Paris and Hergé Museum in Louvain-la-Neuve, Belgium, designed the building's striking modern glass exterior which creates an illusion of movement, like fluid glass ribbons. The curtain wall flows like a cascading waterfall to form the building's entry canopies.

The interiors for the Park Hyatt-branded condominiums have been meticulously designed by New York-based Thomas Juul-Hansen. Juul-Hansen took inspiration from de Portzamparc's exterior, creating discreetly opulent interiors with a nod to French modernists such as Jean Michel Frank.